

Guidelines for Setting Academic Calendar Dates

Framework

CAPP will forward the academic Calendar dates for the upcoming academic year to Senate for the November/December meeting for information.

Periodically, CAPP will review the guidelines for setting these dates and recommend revisions appropriate to the changing needs of the academic environment.

There will be a minimum number of teaching days within the fall and winter academic terms and each summer session (60 days for each academic term plus an examination period, 32 days for each summer session plus one designated exam date).

There will be a minimum of 12 meeting days for each teaching day (Monday-Friday) during the fall and winter terms.

In view of the University's considerable commitments to distributed learning, internationalization and access, the academic schedule herein may be adjusted in very exceptional circumstances for programs and courses delivered via online learning, and programs for off-campus and international cohort groups. For those areas, and with the approval of the Vice President Academic and Provost, academic sessions may begin and end at different dates and may be of shorter or longer duration. Graduate education courses can begin on the first day of exams in April.

Similarly, in exceptional circumstances and with the approval of the Vice President Academic and Provost, classes held online, off-campus and/or international programs may be held on Caritas Day, during November or February study break and on other campus holidays. In these instances, different days may be taken as holidays or study days, to take into account the needs of particular groups of students and the circumstances of the location.
